CONTENTS

1. Prologue: Drawing on Plenitude & Emptiness
   - Dorian Wiszniewski

7. Introduction: On Drawing On
   - Chris French

19. Five lessons in a Ficto-Critical Approach to Design Practice Research
   - Hélène Frichot

33. Animated gazes: Representation and motion in the Kaleidoscopic City
   - Sophia Banou

49. The Bodiless shadow: towards a meta-medial framework
   - Marc Boumeester

61. The House of Multiple Dimensions: Design referencing as creative practice
   - Ersi Ioannidou

75. Pause: a Device for Troubling Routines
   - Sepideh Karami

85. The Limits of the Useful: Revising the operational framework of usefulness in architectural production
   - Miguel Paredes Maldonado

101. “Moving…”
    - Julieanna Preston

111. Points of Departure: The mytho-poetic landscape of Cockatoo Island
    - Thomas A. Rivard

127. YES Boss! The 8 house: Towards a projective critique
    - Helen Runting & Fredrik Torisson

139. Thinking design: Notes on process and pedagogy
    - Randall Teal
Julieanna Preston

“MOVING,,,”
ABSTRACT

“Moving stuff” was a performance in which mud and shipping pallets shifted repeatedly across a historic, geographic, cultural and political zone demarcated by the Whau River Estuary and Rosebank Road’s industrial sector, Auckland, New Zealand. It explored the complexities of notions of ecology and economy hinged to dynamic processes of material exchange and distribution. “Moving stuff” was also an extension of themes recurring throughout my creative work: labour as a time intensive, often excessively repetitive and seemingly monotonous act, and the female body, my body, an organ that is mine to use as only I can choose, as it is employed as a performative feminist tool. “Moving stuff” tested, therefore, both labour as an untaxed investment tied to capitalism, and labour as part of a feminist, embodied materialist critique. “Moving stuff” saw me toil for eight hours a day for two days, walk more than twenty kilometres, converse with more than 600 people, shift more than 160 litres of mud and 150 pallets and finally return the site to the state in which I found it. The only limit to this labour was my personal exhaustion.

This piece represents one a series of interconnected creative works oscillating around this original performance. Three of those works are presented in this journal: a video entitled Stratified Matter: Moving things again (2013), a recording of a presentation given in October 2013 at the Plenitude & Emptiness symposium, and finally this piece, a photo essay chronicling moments from the original performance. None of these subsequent works are adequate representations of the original, nor can they ever be, rather they are works in their own right. Here I ask the watcher/reader to interpret the scenes presented, or better to interpolate from the scenes presented. These pieces therefore represent an exercise focused on keeping the work moving, or as social scientist Bruno Latour advocates, keeping it in circulation.

For the two accompanying pieces see Issue 01, Drawing On: Plenitude & Emptiness at www.drawingon.org

BIOGRAPHY

CREDITS

“Moving stuff,” 2012 [still images]
Spatial Artist: Julieanna Preston

© Julieanna Preston and Drawing On

Published 24th September, 2015.
Enclosed is a gift,

an object from an exhibition called

Rosebank: artifacts of place
Snowhite Gallery, Unitec, Auckland, 16-24 March and

a trace of a public performance entitled

moving stuff,
Croxley, 460 Rosebank Road, Avondale
10am to 5 pm, 23 and 24 March.

Both events are a part of the Rosebank Artwalk in the Auckland Arts Festival.
http://rosebankartwalk.wordpress.com

This sliver of timber was extracted from a standard pallet, a literal tool for industrial transport and an icon of trade and exchange.

Its coating accumulated at the edge of the Whau River estuary as the result of tidal currents laundring organic particles in geological time.

It reproduces an idea that sites of economy and sites of ecology are not so different from one another;
that the systems of industry are not entirely at odds with environmental processes.

This artefact is sent to you to encourage keeping the ideas and materials of moving stuff in circulation;

Please join us in this effort.

Julieanna Preston

julieanna.preston@gmail.com

Thank you to my sponsors
Croxley and Massey University College of Creative Arts
09:00. Open gate, load trolley, drop pallets at street, buckets and shovels at the river bank. Already warm, the road is already busy. I find myself acting as hostess, ushering people through the site, greeting them without the shyness of my normally introverted self. Stacked high, the pallets already feel heavy. A symbol of industrial manufacturing and transportation, a universal unit of a neo-classical capitalist economic system, they enable trade and exchange. And yet, in the first thirty minutes I earn four splinters and bust the popular myth that all pallets are equal...
11:30. Mid morning on the first day of the performance, knee-deep in clay mud, a substance described as "soft tissue... mineralisations... the substratum for the emergence of biological creatures asserting itself." This soft stuff made my footsteps heavy and clumsy. In much the same manner, my tongue, another soft tissue, found it difficult to pronounce the name of the river correctly, for I had collected at least five different ways of saying 'whau' based on the cultural proclivities of local New Zealanders: 'fow', 'phow', 'fa-co', 'faux', and according to some locals, 'wow'.

The public.

The middle-ground.

A mangrove horizon.

The Whau River, a semi-natural water body. Photographs by Hubertus Mick (MICA)
The mud. Photograph by Hubertus Mick (MICA)
“moving stuff” represented at Artifacts of Place, a group exhibition at Snowhite Gallery, Auckland, 2012. Photograph by Julieanna Preston
ISSUE EDITORS
Konstantinos Avramidis
Chris French
Piotr Lesniak
Maria Mitsoula
Dorian Wiszniewski

CONTRIBUTORS
Hélène Frichot
Sophia Banou
Marc Boumeester
Ersi Ioannidou
Sepideh Karami
Miguel Paredes Maldonado
Julieanna Preston
Helen Runting
Fredrik Torrison
Thomas A. Rivard
Randall Teal

COVER IMAGE
Maria Mitsoula

TYPEFACES
Akkurat
Bebas Neue
Courier New